Psychology of Communication

The main concern of this course is about speech production, speech perception and understanding, language acquisition, psychological reality of linguistic theory. But these main concerns are also interspersed with the treatment of gestural and facial communication, conversation management, and other topics that are considered equally worthy of mention in the course of Psychology of Communication.

The goal of this course is to provide an understanding of the natural context of communication as one of the series of channels available to humans to send and receive information. Thus, students will benefit in understanding the structure and properties of communication process carried out by each individual.

By studying Psychology of Communication, students have the initial knowledge to study advanced courses such as Communication Theory, Interpersonal Communication, Political Communication, Intercultural Communication, and Communication in Diversity.
